

6.3_B adverse therapeutic

substances

toxic

characteristics

effective

Complete the summary with words from Exercise A.

Pharmacology is essentially the study of drugs. Drugs are _____ which can have physiological and psychological effects on an organism. Different _____ make drugs suitable for different _____ purposes. For example, some drugs are more _____ for fighting infections. Others can be used to ease pain in different parts of the body. Some drugs are very _____ and can damage the body. Even therapeutic drugs can have _____ side effects for some patients.

6.3_B

Answers 1

Pharmacology is essentially the study of drugs. Drugs are substances which can have physiological and psychological effects on an organism. Different characteristics make drugs suitable for different therapeutic purposes. For example, some drugs are more effective for fighting infections. Others can be used to ease pain in different parts of the body. Some drugs are very toxic and can damage the body. Even therapeutic drugs can have adverse side effects for some patients.

6.3_B

Answers 2

Pharmacology is essentially the study of drugs. Drugs are chemicals which can have physiological and psychological effects on an organism. Different properties make drugs suitable for different healing purposes. For example, some drugs are more successful for fighting infections. Others can be used to ease pain in different parts of the body. Some drugs are very poisonous and can damage the body. Even therapeutic drugs can have harmful side effects for some patients.